Whether you are looking for help for a child with disabilities, with behavioral health needs, in foster care, or in trouble at school, getting help from the state can be a long and difficult process. The goal of this guide is to give you some tips for getting your family the help you need.
YOU ARE NOT ALONE!

SPEAK UP FOR YOUR CHILD.

You don’t have to know everything to speak up for your child. You don’t have to be an expert to make decisions about your child’s care.

• Ask questions about your child’s care.
• If you don’t understand something, ask for someone to explain it.
• Don’t ever be afraid to speak up.

Try to learn as much as you can about Georgia’s behavioral health system. Find more information about available services on page 8.

Hundreds of thousands of families in Georgia are getting state services or applying to receive state services for their children. Others are facing the same situation, too.

• Try to connect with parent-support organizations. These organizations can help you and others like you learn how to deal with the challenges of getting state services for your child.
• Parent and family support organizations can also provide emotional support, advice, and other supplemental services. A list of parent and family support organizations can be found on page 11.

YOU ARE NOT ALONE!

START WITH YOUR CHILD’S SCHOOL.

Your child’s public school is probably the first place where you will begin learning about state services. If your child has special needs or requires additional support, it is important to know your options.

• Read the school’s student handbook or code of conduct to find the rules that affect your child’s rights, especially about discipline and special needs. (Schools are required to give code of conduct books out to students and parents at the beginning of every school year.)

• Don’t wait until your child is in trouble. Meet with teachers about behavior concerns before they call you. Look into support options for your child at school. A Student Support Team can help address your child’s needs without creating an Individualized Education Plan (IEP). Some schools have other behavioral support options.

• Speak up if your child is having difficulty keeping up with school work, is being bullied, or needs additional help. Most schools have a lot of available resources to help. Use them.

• If an issue is not being handled properly, do not be afraid to move the issue up to somebody with more authority.
• If you think your child needs special education or a student-support plan, do not wait. Talk to your school social worker about what options are available.

• If the current IEP or 504 plan is not helping your child, you have the right to change it or end it.

• Take advantage of all the resources the schools should offer. Many schools have graduation coaches, social workers, and tutoring services. If your child has an IEP or a 504 plan then the school should be helping with your child’s behavioral health needs, as well.
Consider how trauma and the environment can affect your child’s behavior. Studies have shown that when dangerous or traumatic events happen to or around kids (such as violence, death of a loved one, or sexual or physical abuse), it can greatly affect their behavior.

SUPPORT YOUR CHILD.

- Discipline, routine, medication, and behavioral health support can help meet your child’s needs. Be open to trying various methods of support.
- Work with your service providers to create an individualized plan that is best for your child.
- You know your child best and have final say. If providers present a plan that you know won’t work, ask for a new plan.
- Having a child with disabilities or behavioral health needs is stressful. Parent and family support groups can help. See page 11.
- If your child is in a state of crisis where he or she is a threat to you, someone else, or themselves, call 911. If you do need the police, ask for an officer with Crisis Intervention Training and inform the dispatcher that your child has behavioral health needs.
- If your child is in a state of crisis, but not posing a threat, call the Georgia Crisis Access Line at 1-800-715-4225.
Parent and family support organizations: No matter what challenge you or your child may be facing, it is very important to connect with people who have been through what you are going through or who are currently dealing with the system themselves. After connecting to the appropriate agency for your need, reach out to an organization that specializes in peer-to-peer, or informal advocacy for people dealing with the system.

(For a list of these organizations, see p. 11.)
If your child is in a state of crisis?

Yes

Is your child in danger or a threat to himself/herself or others?

Yes

Call 911. See p. 5 for advice when dealing with the police.

No

Call Georgia Crisis Access Line at 1-800-715-4225 for immediate consultation and referral to services.

No

Which area of need best describes your behavioral health concern?

My child is constantly getting into trouble at school.

Does your child have an Individualized Educational Plan (IEP) or 504 plan?

Yes

No

My child is in legal trouble.

Detained

In custody

If your child is in custody of the Department of Juvenile Justice or on probation, talk to his/her probation officer to request behavioral health services. These resources can be paid for through insurance or your child's probation officer can identify subsidized or free resources.

If your child is in a secure Department of Juvenile Justice facility, he/she will have a counselor who can inform you about available services. Mental health counselors can address your child's treatment needs while he/she is detained.

If you can't afford coverage, the Georgia Crisis Access Line (1-800-715-4225) can direct you to subsidized behavioral health care in your area.

You can also reach out to Community Service Boards. (See p. 15.)

Attempt to reach out to supervisors or principals if your case manager is not responding.

I can't reach my DFCS case manager, probation officer, or school social worker and I am not sure what to do next.

Very important to connect with people who have been through what you are going through or who are currently in an organization that specializes in peer-to-peer, or informal advocacy for people dealing with the system. (For a list of these organizations, see p. 11.)

If you don’t have health insurance and need coverage, first check to see if you are eligible for Medicaid. Go to gateway.ga.gov to check your eligibility.

• If you qualify for Medicaid, you will need to sign up with one of the four care management organizations. Your options depend on the conditions of your eligibility. See page 10 for more details.

• If you don’t qualify for Medicaid, you can try to obtain affordable health insurance in the Marketplace at Healthcare.gov, or call 1-866-988-8246.
  • If you can’t afford coverage see the orange section of the Behavioral Health Access Map for more service options.
