My work is about the different roles we play in our day to day life: mother, daughter, friend, lover. I use figurative sculpture to illustrate these roles within the female context. Referencing Christian imagery, my figures exist at a scale similar to domestic icons, but are also the relative size of a child's doll. Through observing relationships and interactions we have within ourselves and with other people I create work that is about woman's social roles, about the taboo, the seen and unseen, and the hidden truths that linger just below the surface of ourselves.
