The Olympics occur every four years in an urban city. When the bids are given to cities, the cities usually side with excitement. The Olympics are a large-scale event that requires much of the cities. The Olympics do not just require a lot of financial help; they also require the citizens to make room the event. In some case, basic human rights have been violated. While the Olympics lasts only two weeks the effects it leaves on the citizens lasts years after the games are over. The effects of the Olympics leave the cities in which it occurs are negative. In Atlanta, the 1996 Olympics left many homeless people displaced from the halfway homes and government facilities. This was done to clean the city before the games. The effects can be seen in present day all around the city of Atlanta. For the 2016 games to occur in Rio de Janeiro, many people were removed from their homes to make room for new stadiums and info structures. In both cases the cities has millions of dollars invested in them. The effects that the games have left on the cities are similar. People were displaced to make room for the games and once the games ended they were forgotten. The study will compare and contract the way effect the Olympic games left on both cities. This research paper will compare and contrast the effects that the Olympics has left in Atlanta and Rio de Janeiro.
