200 Words describing your work:

For this series I wanted to capture the wondering and layering quality of memory. I think there is a beauty and decay that is present in all my work. Also I approach every piece I make through a repetitive process. This often takes the form of multiples. I related this back to human’s natural instinct toward collection, collecting things is one of my earliest memories.

I like to make textile works that reference the material in some way. For this I incorporated my own designs of spilt ink, dyed yarn and printed lace. This makes for a sort of winding falling composition. Yet the blank depths of the design have a dream like quality about them. Often parts of memory and dreams are missing and then reinvented. I wanted to express this loss and decay of the mind. However, I feel it’s not a sad, mourning type of loss. The type of loss present in my work is natural and hopeful making space for the new and reflecting on the old simultaneously.
